

ABSTRACT

Lela Tavdgiridze, Nana Mazmishvili

Full Professor at the Department of Pedagogical Sciences

Batumi Shota Rustaveli State University, Georgia

Effective Methods of Teaching Interpersonal Skills to Higher Education Managers

Due to many changes and reforms in higher education in the frame of the Bologna process as well as the multiple development in the social life and civilization in general, management principles of the higher education institutions and scientific-research centres have been dramatically changed that led to requiring new competences and skills from the managers performing in the higher education field.

In our research we will deal with the specific competences managers in the higher education system should have with the particular focus on interpersonal skills as one of the most important and leading skills in terms of ensuring effective management; the research also will present the efficient ways of teaching interpersonal skills to the potential managers.